Guideline on

Laboratory Results

RELEASE NOTES (Release 1.1, November 2024)

The eHealth Network (eHN) guidelines on Laboratory Results are the latest example on how the eHN interoperability efforts shape the way how health data exchange takes place around EU. The Laboratory Results guidelines are the foundation for the cross-border exchange of laboratory results in MyHealth@EU and can as well inspire other projects at European or national level.

The first release of the eHN laboratory results guidelines results from the combined efforts of EU projects, stakeholders' contributions, Member States recommendations and concerns. However, it should be highlighted that this version should be used as solid platform for future improvements considering the many aspects of interest identified during the consultation phase and should be object of reflection and consideration.

Release 1.1 includes minor updates carried out by eHealth Network Consistency between eHealth Network Guidelines taskforce. The taskforce was assigned the task of reviewing all existing eHealth Network Guidelines to ensure consistency in content, the textual changes were agreed to be made. No revisions were made on the use cases in the Guidelines, or the use cases present in the European Health Data Space Regulation. This work could be done in a future iteration.
